

My WayCam Experience
Riley Starr

Dear Whomever, It May Concern,

WayCam holds an extremely special place in my heart because it allowed me to build a solid foundation of how the video world works and it gave me the confidence to tell my stories through film production. I first got involved with WayCam during my freshman year of high school in a video production class.

Back then (2009) it was the old studio; however, I was still blown away and captivated by all the equipment. In high school I knew I wanted to find a career in the video production world and WayCam helped build the skills and knowledge I needed to know through programs such as the Sports Update, filming basketball/football games and using the studio for in class and personal projects. I was able to use the new studio to its max compacity during my senior year when I filmed a short film using the green screen. The technology at my fingertips was something I could have never imagined, and it catapulted my knowledge onto a whole new level.

It is my hope that students coming up behind me can experience the excitement, knowledge and confidence that they need. WayCam is more than any ordinary classroom. It is a place for students to learn skills that are essential for the any film production career or other creative path. The money you provide will help generations to come.

Sincerely,

Riley C. Starr
